Spontaneous bile leakage from hepatocellular carcinoma: Successful management by radiological-guided compression with a removable tube. Spontaneous bile leakage from hepatocellular carcinoma (HCC) is uncommon and difficult to manage. A 56-year-old female was referred to our hospital for hepatomegaly with suspected biliary obstruction. She did not have any endoscopic findings of biliary tract leakage, although the laboratory data indicated non-specific cholestasis. Dynamic computed tomography (CT) examination revealed a heterogeneous mass in the lateral segment of the left hepatic lobe, with delayed high density in the region. ERCP was not performed. On August 22, 2013, a biliary stent was successfully inserted from the right bile duct to the left, and to the lateral hepatic bile duct. The patient underwent hepatectomy for the resectable liver tumor. Intraoperatively, a part of the tumor protruded into the left hepatic vein. A leak of bile from the tumor was noted with liver congestion. The bile leakage was precisely located at the site of the tumor by intraoperative angiography, and was successfully treated by placement of a single-balloon covered, 10 Fr, removable biliary tube. The patient was discharged uneventfully on postoperative day 12. This study demonstrated that spontaneous bile leakage from HCC is easily diagnosed on CT. CT-guided percutaneous placement of a removable tube is an effective and minimally invasive technique. We just had our first meeting with the "gate keepers" of Britain's National Health Service and have been shocked to learn that despite promises, there will be no progress on the 45% of patients who are waiting over a year. We are in the process of developing a platform and a work plan to help us with the fight for our patients. If you are also keen to support, you can help us by donating. We will be holding regular meetings with our chairwoman. The area selected will remain intact and the tool will completely fill in the missing area. The Magic Wand tool is used to select the area to be modified. The Smudge tool is used to blur the image or create a blurred gradient by smearing an effect using the brush. Tools are found under the Window menu. Press the Windows key on the keyboard to open the tools menu. There are seven tools available: Pencil, Lasso, Blur, Magic Wand, Scissors, Gradient, and Filters. You can also use the Pen Tool to resize shapes, create shapes from existing images or to draw shapes in image processing software. To create shapes with the Pen Tool, drag the cursor across the image. The cursor changes to a rounded edge when you drag it past an object. When you let go of the cursor, the shape you created will remain. You can select the shape and shape it if you want to. To shape a line, continue to move the cursor until the shape line appears. You can change the Pen Tool settings in the Options bar. You can change the line width, the line color and the line opacity.
